My best friend's name is Emil. Emil, the only son of his parents, has so many good qualities. He is intelligent, brave, and honest.

We call him a little detective. His curiosity about anything is amazing! A few days ago, he went to Dhaka from his hometown alone.

He went by train. In the station, one of his relatives was waiting for him.

After his return, we asked him, "Emil, Were you afraid on the train?"

He answered, "Why should I? My father gave me clear instructions. And the people on the train loved me a lot".

> Experience at A Railway and A Bus Station <

Yes, I have visited both a railway station and a bus station. Both places always remain crowded. I have visited these places several times.

A railway or a bus station is a place where trains or buses stop to pick up and drop off passengers. A bus station is not like a railway station.

It differs from that with regard to structure. But it has a similarity to the railway station with regard to function. A railway station is used for passengers and so is the case with a bus station.

When I was about ten, I have visited a railway station with my parents for the first time and I visit a bus station almost every week.

I went to the station because it was near to my father's office. When I went to the railway station, I saw a shed over the platform.

The railway station had its master's office, a booking-office, and waiting room for men and women.

There were restaurants, bookstalls and stationery shops also. Passengers came and went away. People were found in a long line to buy tickets.

They pushed one another to go ahead. When the train arrived, the station became noisier than before. It was a disgusting matter to me.

But when the train whistled away, it became calm and quiet. This matter was very interesting to me.
